uMatrix for Chrome Cracked Accounts is an extension that provides you with more visibility and control over the content loaded by the browser. The free version of the utility is designed to help you block ads by displaying ads you do not want to see. When you open a browser extension of your choice, you are no doubt aware that you have to log in to an account, enter your name and email and click Submit. However, based on the latest findings, you can get by with just one piece of information. The reason is that this data will help populate your profile with relevant information regarding your interests and preferences in order to show you the most pertinent results. The question that comes to mind right now is just what are we supposed to do to make sure that this kind of data gathering is acceptable for us. After all, if the sites in question are shown results which are relevant for their users, there should be no need for them to ascertain so much information about the Web surfers. Currently, you can ask the sites to show content according to your interests. In case you wish to find a way to make sure that relevant results will be shown to you based on the latest information the sites have on you, then consider using a browser extension. Used that tool in IE before. It was so good I thought Chrome would pale by comparison. Yeah, with this extension installed, viewing a website that uses the JS trick won't load. Daniel can we block google from recording the ip and location of everyones browser? Brian I don't think so. The UK has nothing in place like that. Although some people don't like to use Google as their search engine, it is the best in my opinion. It's the search engine that used to be the biggest for Windows and Mac and still one of the biggest. You don't know the competition, but you will be surprised at the power of Google. Let's hope they keep on improving. Sarah You might like chrome rules. It's "cheaper" than uMatrix but it doesn't connect to Google analytics. mary I use this extension in Internet Explorer, and blocking cookies is enough for me to drop a site off my regular visit list. snugger nice extension. maybe the same can be done in Firefox too? A Great extension. You know what would be cool though? An extension that automatically detects these trackers and blocks them. If it takes a while for the developer to block the trackers, let's just enable an autoblocker. Thank you for this extension. Excellent work. I've been using it for a few months now with no issues. 09e8f5149f
